

I think it is a horrible contradiction for the FCC to place such huge fines on public broadcasters without given a plausible definition of what is indecent, and yet force the public, which it is supposedly protecting, to be harassed by telemarketers constantly. This will cause the public to be angered but it will also cost them financially because of increased phone use especially on cell phones. If the FCC decides to overturn NJ's do not call laws it will only be serving commercial interests and NOT the public
